'The body of Benjamin Franklin, printer, like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out and stripped of its lettering and gilding, lies here, food for worms. But the work shall not be lost; for it will, as he believed, appear once more in a new and more elegant edition, revised and corrected by the Author.'

Pussy willow buds are white. To find this alien in a sapless world is to see against the sky on a distant hilltop an adventurous vidette who has ridden in advance even of his far advanced company and who, although but a speck against the sky, is the portend of what is to follow.

In this part of the Middle West, the month of May is regarded as a sovereign remedy for tired bodies and winter weary spirits. The trees are aleaf, tulips stand in colorful array and the soft evening air is heavy with the scent of lilacs.

This is the month for amateur printers to emerge from their basement burrows and garage hideaways to mow their grass in earnest, take up arms against dandelions and dig their gardens. It is too early to set type on a card table in the back yard clad in shorts and sandals, but these happy days will soon be here.

Cooperative Effort: Cut by Hanke, Copy by "Coronary Charley" Duerr, Proof Reading by Cuddington, Printing by Boyd

This border was cast by the Johnson Type Foundry of Philadelphia. It is thirteen point.

The house is an electrotpe by Barnhart Bros. & Spindler. The birdie in the bush is a typecast cut shown on page 666 of their 1908 catalog. The month and year are in their 24 point Title No 5, shown in the same book.

This 6 point is unidentified. The pinmark looks like a three-spoked wheel.

OCTOBER REVERIE

October days are here once more,
and frost and wind and sun, each has a chore.
From each tree the leaves are falling down,
as the grass and flowers turn from green to brown.
The restless birds have gathered into flocks;
Fields of corn have been gathered into shocks.
And when the scudding clouds permit a view,
I see the sky, seeking to retain it's summer blue.
I see the forecast in my withered lawn,
of a not far in the future, frigid dawn.
A dawn when icy winds will blow-piling into drifts the lately fallen snow,

to make a coverlet, a mantle, clean and white,
that can hide an ugly world, in just a single night.

Now a flock of wild geese, flying south,
to nest in marsh and feed at river mouth,
does but presage the blossoms and warm rain-that I shall know when spring has come again.

And when the sands have measured time, aft and fore,
October surely will be here once more.
